

THE SUPREME PRICE

A FILM BY JOANNA LIPPER

FACEBOOK

TWITTER

WEBSITE

Filmmaker

Joanna Lipper
Vertumnus Productions
Joanna@joannalipper.com

Publicity

Adam J. Segal
The 2050 Group
(202) 422-4673 (mobile)
adam@the2050group.com

Int. Sales Agent

Philippa Kowarsky
Cinephil
+972 3 566 4129
philippa@cinephil.co.il

Distributor (North America)

Kristen Fitzpatrick
Women Make Movies
(212) 925-0606, x312
kf@wmm.com

EXCERPTS FROM RECENT PRESS

“The Supreme Price is a deeply profound and beautiful experience, and an integral film to watch.” - Indiewire

“Taking a long historical view of a troubled country struggling to emerge from a military dictatorship is Joanna Lipper’s documentary “The Supreme Price,” about Nigeria’s female-directed democracy movement. After a military coup in 1993, M. K.O Abiola, a pro-democracy leader who was considered the victor in aborted presidential elections that year but never took office, was imprisoned in 1994. Four years later he died under suspicious circumstances. After his imprisonment, his fearless, eloquent wife, Kudirat, took over the movement’s leadership, but she was assassinated in 1996. The history is told through the eyes of their daughter Hafsat Abiola, a Harvard-educated crusader for human rights and democracy who now leads a movement to dismantle the country’s patriarchal structure.” - The New York Times

“Some of the best documentaries tell inspiring stories of people overcoming the unthinkable... With an uptick in kidnappings and killings, the situation in Nigeria is looking bleak. How exactly did the country get to such a state? Joanna Lipper’s film looks at the pro-democracy movement in the corrupt African nation but also gives a helpful tutorial on Nigerian politics.” - The Washington Post

“...Nigeria’s history is fleshed out in a new documentary called The Supreme Price. It’s a fascinating history lesson about the country and gives a compelling account of how Moshood Abiola’s senior wife, Kudirat Abiola, and their daughter, Hafsat Abiola, risked their lives to reinstate Abiola and fight for the pro-democracy movement in modern-day Nigeria.” - The Root

“The Supreme Price is one of ten films all human rights activists should see.” - Huffington Post

For more information please visit: www.JoannaLipper.com

THE SUPREME PRICE

The Supreme Price is a feature length documentary film that traces the evolution of the Pro-Democracy Movement in Nigeria and efforts to increase the participation of women in leadership roles. Following the annulment of her father's victory in Nigeria's Presidential Election and her mother's assassination by agents of the military dictatorship, Hafsat Abiola faces the challenge of transforming a corrupt culture of governance into a democracy capable of serving Nigeria's most marginalized population: women.

SYNOPSIS

In 1993 Nigeria elected M.K.O. Abiola as president in a historic vote that promised to end years of military dictatorship. Shortly after, the election was annulled and a military coup brought General Sani Abacha into power. M.K.O Abiola was imprisoned and his wife, Kudirat, took over the leadership of the pro-democracy movement. She organized rallies and the longest oil workers strike in Nigerian history, winning international attention for the Nigerian struggle against human rights violations perpetrated by the military dictatorship. Because of this work, she too became a target and was assassinated in 1996. Director Joanna Lipper elegantly dovetails past and present as she tells this story through the eyes of their eldest daughter, Hafsat Abiola, who was about to graduate from Harvard when her mother was murdered. Her father died in prison two years later. Determined not to let her parents' ideals die with them, Hafsat has dedicated her adult life to continuing their fight for democracy. Returning to Nigeria after years abroad, she is at the forefront of a progressive movement to empower women and dismantle the patriarchal structure of Nigerian society. A startlingly intimate rendering of the epic and tragic inter-generational Abiola family saga, THE SUPREME PRICE provides a unprecedented look inside of Africa's most populous nation from the perspective of women, exposing a deep history of political corruption and a culture where a tiny circle of political elites monopolize billions of dollars worth of oil revenue while the vast majority of 165 million Nigerian people remain impoverished.

CHARACTERS IN THE FILM

M.K.O Abiola
*President-elect of Nigeria
(1993)*

Kudirat Abiola
Leader of the Pro-Democracy Movement

Hafsat Abiola
Eldest Daughter of M.K.O. and Kudirat Abiola; Founder of Kudirat Initiative For Democracy; Special Advisor to the Governor of Ogun State on the Millenium Development Goals

Olalekan Yusau Abiola
*Eldest Son of M.K.O. and Kudirat Abiola
Head of Mosque on Family Compound*

Khafila Abiola
Daughter of M.K.O. and Kudirat Abiola, US Citizen

Abdul Mumuni Abiola
Younger Son of M.K.O. and Kudirat Abiola; Was a child when his mother and father were killed

Dr. Joe Okei-Odumakin
President, Women Arise for Change Initiative and Campaign for Democracy; Winner of the US Secretary of State's International Women of Courage Award

Wole Soyinka
*Writer and Political Activist
Nobel Laureate in Literature*

Amy Oyekunle
*Executive Director KIND
Member of Roundtable Discussion*

Hon. Akindele Opeyemi
*Politician
Member of KIND Roundtable Discussion*

Oluwatobi Raheem
*Trainee at KIND
Member of Roundtable Discussion*

Nicholas Costello
Hafsat's husband, father of their two children; British Diplomat based in Brussels, Belgium; Worked on Nigeria Desk for European Union

CHARACTERS IN THE FILM

Walter Carrington
*U.S Ambassador to Nigeria
(1993–1997)*

John Campbell
*U.S. Ambassador to Nigeria
(2004–2007)
Senior Fellow for Africa Policy Studies
Council on Foreign Relations*

Gen. Ibrahim Babangida
*Nigerian Military Ruler
Head of State (1985–1993)*

General Sani Abacha
*Nigerian Military Ruler
Head of state (1993–1998)*

David Attah
*Chief Spokesman
Nigerian Military Government
(1993–1998)*

Ken Saro Wiwa
Writer and Environmentalist Executed (1995)

Nelson Mandela
*President of South Africa
(1994–1999)*

Kofi Annan
*Secretary-General
United Nations (1997–2006)*

Goodluck Johnathan
*President of Nigeria
(2010–Present)*

BIOGRAPHY OF FILMMAKER

Joanna Lipper is an award-winning filmmaker and Lecturer at Harvard University where she teaches Using Film for Social Change in the Department of African and African-American Studies. Her work as a documentary filmmaker has been supported by the MacArthur Foundation, Ford Foundation, ITVS, Britdoc Foundation, the Gucci Tribeca Documentary Fund, Women Make Movies and Chicken & Egg Pictures. Her latest documentary, The Supreme Price, received the Gucci Tribeca Spotighting Women Documentary Award. An extended trailer from the film was commissioned to launch Gucci's Chime for Change Women's Empowerment Campaign at TED 2013. Previous films Lipper has produced and directed include Inside Out: Portraits of Children (1996), Growing Up Fast (1999) and Little Fugitive (2006). Lipper is the author of the nationally acclaimed book Growing Up Fast. Her photography has been published and exhibited in the US and overseas.

For more information please visit: www.JoannaLipper.com

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

Several years ago when I began working on my documentary, I had no way of knowing that in the month leading up to the film's premiere at the Human Rights Watch Film Festival, Nigeria would be front and center in news around the world. The horrific kidnapping of over 250 school girls in the north part of the country is a tragic story that touches upon the film's key themes: the need to protect, educate and empower women and girls; the need for increased numbers of women leaders in political positions of power to represent their best interests; the violent backlash in the face of progressive change when it comes to traditional gendered stereotypes that involve the oppression of women; and the complete absence of a Nigerian government that is accountable to the masses. My film aims to provide context and a historical backdrop for understanding these kinds of developments, while also highlighting the efforts of heroic Nigerian women who are working every day to educate women, to hold their leaders accountable, and to improve their country so that Nigeria can realize its enormous potential.

Kudirat Abiola Corner is located on Second Avenue and 44th Street in New York City. The street sign was erected in honor of Kudirat Abiola's martyrdom as a human rights activist. It hangs directly in front of the Nigerian consulate just one block away from the UN—yet most pedestrians passing by know nothing about Kudirat Abiola's heroism or Nigeria's history.

I set out to make a film that honored the personal and professional sacrifices that Kudirat and other women activists make on a daily basis as agents of change in Nigeria. For these women, entering the public sphere and speaking out against the government required the courage to fight against deeply entrenched cultural, religious and political norms—often with severe repercussions including arrest, incarceration and in the most extreme cases, death. For me as a filmmaker coming from outside the culture, the opportunity to tell this significant Nigerian story was a huge responsibility and an intimidating challenge. What gave me the confidence to undertake this project was my access to Hafsat Abiola and her willingness to provide introductions to other family members, to the staff of her NGO, KIND, and to professionals she knew in the Nollywood community who welcomed me and facilitated filming in Lagos and Ogun State. Hafsat's expertise and first-hand experience as an insider was my point of entry into this complex story.

I was intent on visually capturing the vast economic disparities between the elites and the masses, the energy of the crowds, the diverse sounds and the incredibly vibrant colors of Nigeria. I sought to portray the collaborative efforts of Christian and Muslim women working together towards the shared goals of democracy and women's empowerment. I wanted the film to resonate for Nigerians while also being accessible and informative for international audiences without any previous exposure.

From my perspective as a director, the universal emotional core of the film was always the parent-child relationships between M.K.O and Kudirat and their children. Kudirat Abiola made sure that Hafsat and her other daughters had educational opportunities that she herself never had growing up as a Muslim girl born and raised in Northern Nigeria. Her parents couldn't afford to send all of their children to university so they sent their sons. When M.K.O married Kudirat, he paid a bride price. Kudirat regretted not continuing her education beyond secondary school and made sure that her bride price was used to pay for her younger sisters to go to university. Years later, Kudirat sent Hafsat and her siblings to study in the United States where they were exposed to different cultural conceptions of gender roles.

continued on next page

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT (continued)

Hafsat's focus on empowering women reflects the influence of several key factors including her mother's activism and martyrdom; her own education at Phillips Academy Andover and Harvard; and her experience as a child growing up in a polygamous family, witnessing competition amongst her father's four official wives for status, resources and recognition. In her personal life, Hafsat has dramatically departed from the structure of her family of origin, choosing monogamy and marrying outside her race, religion and culture. Her openness to making difficult, controversial choices when it comes to balancing her roles as a Muslim woman, a wife and a mother with her career, make her a revolutionary role model for young women who feel pressured to conform to gendered stereotypes.

Ensuring that this film has an impact in Nigeria and educationally around the world is a high priority for me. Two of the film's major funders (the MacArthur Foundation and Ford Foundation) have offices in Nigeria and do extensive impact and outreach work both in the North and in the South. In addition to these two alliances, I have established partnerships with Women for Women, Vital Voices and a number of Nigerian grassroots organizations including the Mobile Cinema Initiative, KIND, and Women Arise. In all countries around the world, women suffer gender-based violence and discrimination and have to contend with many obstacles in their way to become leaders in their chosen fields of work. I hope that this film will reach and inspire women who might not otherwise have the opportunity to see it, and that it will provoke conversations around the world about global solidarity amongst women when it comes to equal rights and leadership and protecting the rights of the most vulnerable.

Joanna Lipper
Cambridge, Massachusetts

DIRECTOR'S NOTES ON ARCHIVAL FOOTAGE

I set out to tell the intergenerational story of the Abiola family's epic rise and fall unfolding against the historical backdrop of Nigeria's evolution from independence in 1960—through the Biafra War, subsequent military dictatorships, and the tumultuous transition to civilian rule—to present day. In constructing the historical sections of the film I relied on archival footage gathered from a vast array of sources on three continents. During the Abacha's military regime, Nigerian media was highly censored. To get around the censorship, international news organizations hired Nigerian cameramen, then smuggled their footage out of the country. This footage was digitized, well preserved, catalogued and easily obtained. I was also able to obtain some archival amateur footage from that period via Witness, a human rights organization that distributes cameras to civilians who can then document human rights violations as they are occurring. However, some of the key footage of Kudirat and MKO Abiola on the campaign trail during the 1993 election was not found in any archive and might never have reached any audience at all. It came from the home of the Nigerian cameraman who had accompanied the Abiola delegation on the campaign trail in Northern Nigeria as well as in the South. His VHS tapes had not ever been copied, logged or labeled and were in rough shape but we were able to have them transferred and restored so that this historic campaign, these charismatic leaders and the Nigerian masses from that moment in time could be preserved and brought to life on film.

Kudirat Abiola, Leader of the Pro-Democracy Movement in Nigeria (1997).

VERTUMNUS PRODUCTIONS PRESENTS

Produced and Directed by Joanna Lipper

Cinematography by Richard Sands
Joanna Lipper
Lisa Rinzler

Film Editor
Geoff Richman

Editors
Tina Grapenthin
Ali Muney

Music Composed and Conducted by Nathan Larson

Motion Graphics
Joe Fuller for MediaStorm

Co-Producer
Tunde Kelani

MacArthur
Foundation

JustFilms
FORDFOUNDATION

TRIBECA
FILM INSTITUTE.

[ITVS]
PUBLIC MEDIA'S
INDEPENDENT VOICE
GUCCI